2715 Peachtree Square, Atlanta | GA

The building is situated on .95 acres with modern office space, an up-scale conference room, large open warehouse, a completely finished dining and gathering room, and a state-of-the-art commercial kitchen.

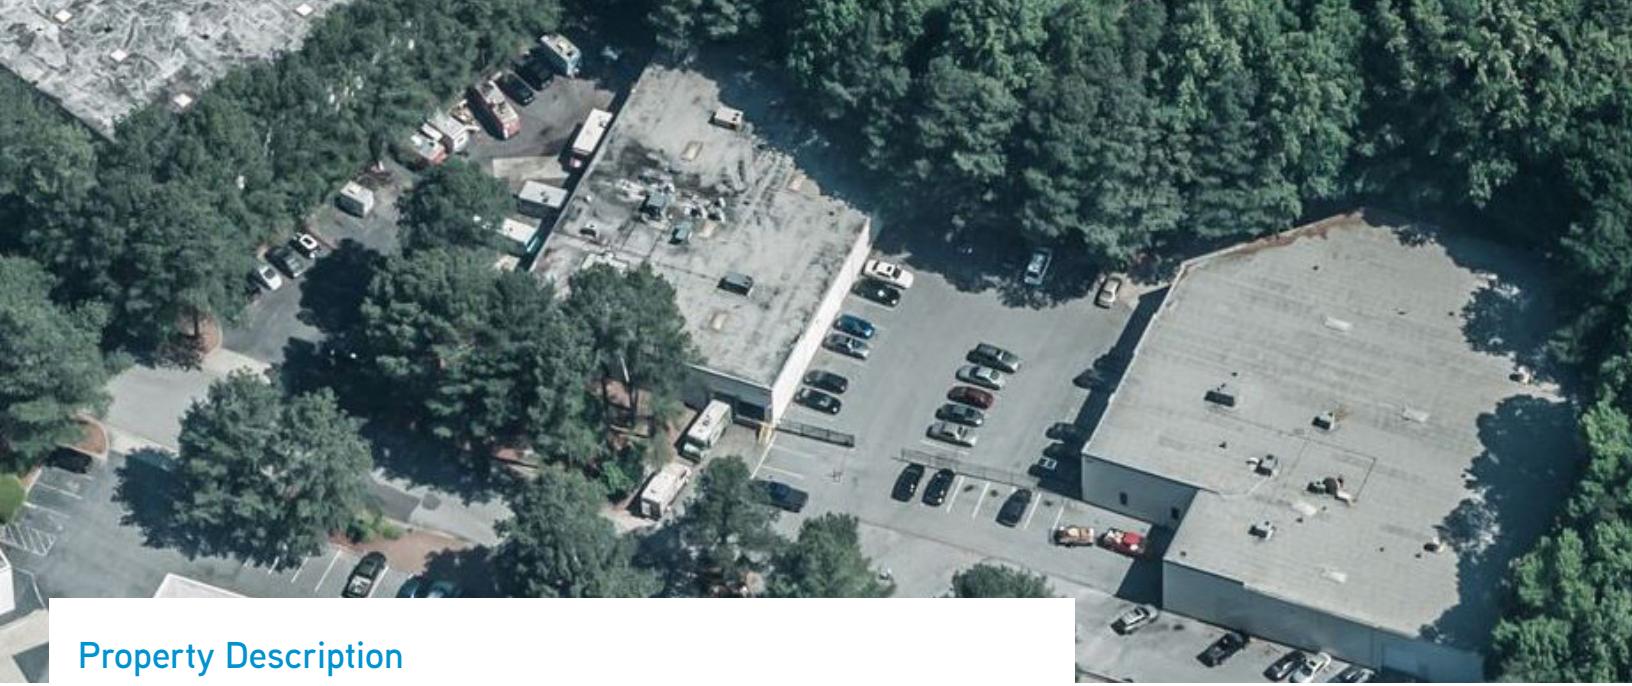

Executive Summary

2715 Peachtree Square is a 13,748 SF food commissary and industrial distribution facility, owned and operated by The Food Movement. This offering represents the opportunity for an investor or user to acquire both an immediately profitable food services business, as well as prime real estate in the Northeast corridor of Atlanta. An ideal buyer would be an owner/operator of an existing food services company who is looking to grow their business with minimal capital expense outlay and can use the commercial kitchen and distribution space, or a passive investor looking for a cash flowing investment. The day one profitability and turnkey nature of the operation will allow a company to scale their business exponentially while limiting risk.

Understanding the Food Truck Business

Food trucks and street food is a rapidly growing industry in metro Atlanta. Food trucks thrive off the densely populated CBD's of Downtown, Buckhead, Central Perimeter, etc, as well as from endless catering opportunities from offices, weddings, corporate events, private parties, and film sets. One of the most difficult aspects of running a food truck business is obtaining and holding the proper licenses. A food truck operator has to obtain various licenses from local cities and counties in order to operate, and one of the key components a truck must comply with is showing it has a central commissary base of operation. There are currently over 175 food trucks operating in metro-Atlanta, and each one must have a central commissary, such as the Food Movement, to prep and store food and to park the truck when not in use. There are only two public food truck commissaries available, and for this reason The Food Movement is a vital component of the food truck industry in Atlanta.
