Hazelwood Green

Open Spaces,
Open Minds

A 178-acre historic brownfield site on the Monongahela River has been completely reimagined for the future. Headed by Almono and Tishman Speyer, in collaboration with UPitt and Carnegie Mellon, this former LTV Coke steel mill in Pittsburgh's Hazelwood neighborhood has been transformed into a mixed-use neighborhood that's seamlessly blending state-of-the-art offices and labs, multifamily residences, retail outlets, and green spaces into a expansive, future-forward community. At Hazelwood, tomorrow happens today. Be part of what's happening next.

History & vision

For over 100 years, the Hazelwood Green site was home to Jones & Laughlin Steel: a driving force in Pittsburgh's historical industrial renown. But, as the steel industry waned, so did activity at the site—that is, until 2002, when a group of Pittsburgh foundations purchased the land with a new future in mind.

The former J&L Steel plant (1987).

The Vision

To develop a transformative model for community development that provides a platform for the Pittsburgh region's growing innovation economy while remaining adaptable and resilient to fast-changing markets and natural conditions.

The Users

Technology, life sciences, advanced manufacturing, energy generation, robotics, AI, research and development, and production companies seeking an integrated base of operations.

Principals for Development

» Attract new investment to the region, city, and neighborhood.
» Advance transformative models.
» Create a built form that reflects excellence in design.
» Create on-site renewable energy and low impact utility infrastructure.
» Generate diverse economic and social value.
» Provide job opportunities for workers at a range of levels.
» Foster a diverse, welcoming, and enjoyable working environment.
» Provide multi-modal transit options within a well-connected system.
